When it comes to looking after any essential difference between the two, Dr. Parkhurst says he is unable to discover it.

A writer in the New York Tribune who evidently knows whereof he speaks, disposes of the statement that the late Mr. Merzanthaler did not reap the rewards which he was fairly entitled to as the inventor of the linotype machine. Dying at the early age of 45, he had already received in cash, after his invention had become productive, more than $1,000,000. Shortly before his death he sold his remaining stock for between $300,000 and $400,000, and his heirs continue to receive his royalties at the same rate at which they were paid in his lifetime.

It has been many years since so much public land has been sold in the Rocky mountain region as the general land office reports disposed of in the past fiscal year. The crime for which Coleman was burned is the murder of Mrs. John Lashbrook, who had given him a home and food.
